Beats per Keats
- from the music desk -

This issue of Statik, announcing the national campus/community radio conference, highlights CKUT's participation in an informal network of like-minded broadcasters. Our efforts to expose creative music to a large audience are made more effective by the existence of other stations throughout the country - allowing independent artists to reach a national audience. Radio art, the exploration of the creative opportunities of the radio medium, particularly relies on the availablity of airtime and on the open formats of community stations across Canada. The Radio Contortions festival, which will be launched at 22h00 on July 3, will present live and recorded works from an international group of radio artists. From July 4-12, a number of short works will circulate throughout regular programming and on July 9-12 there will be live performances, panels and longer recorded works broadcast each night from 20-22h00.

As usual, this schedule sees a host of program changes at CKUT. Frankly, there are too many to mention individually, so please read over the schedule on the back cover of this guide to find your old favorites as well as some exciting new additions. And, most of all, explore our airwaves - I'm sure you'll find something you like.

Statik présente le Congrès National de Radios Etudiantes et Communautaire, un événement qui souligne l'implication de CKUT dans un réseau informel de stations véhiculant des idées semblables aux nôtres.

Nos efforts pour faire connaître la musique originale à un public plus large sont rendu plus efficaces par l'existence d'autres stations a travers le pays. Ces stations permettent aux artistes indépendants de toucher un public national. La création radiophonique, qui consiste en l'exploration des possibilités sonores de la radio, dépend de la disponibilitée du temps d'antenne que les stations communautaires peuvent fournir à travers le Canada. Le festival "Radio Contortions", qui débute à 22h le 3 juillet, présentera, en direct et en différé, des oeuvres d'un groupe international d'artistes radiophoniques. Un nombre d'oeuvres succintes seront diffusées au cours de notre programmation régulière du 4 au 12 juillet. CKUT diffusera des spectacles en direct, des tribunes et des oeuvres enregistrées plus substantielles tous les soirs de 20h à 22h du 9 au 12 juillet.

Comme d'habitude, nous avons plusieurs nouvelles émissions à vous proposer. Il y a malheureusement trop de changements pour entrer dans les détails, mais je vous invite à consulter l'horaire imprimé au dos de ce guide afin de retrouver vos émissions favorites ou pour découvrir une ou plusieurs de nos nouvelles émissions. Explorez notre programmation, je suis sûr que vous y trouverez quelque chose qui vous plaira.

Words Worth
- from the spoken word desk -

This has been an exciting year for the Spoken Word department at CKUT. Coming off the success of our Second Annual Funding Drive, programmers have a renewed mandate to provide the best in alternative programming. Some of the changes you might be interested to note include a move for International Radio Report, a show for the shortwave radio enthusiast, to Sundays from 10h30-11h00; Latin Time and America Latina are now back to back for an hour and a half of latin programming, on Sundays from 9h-10h30; these changes left room for an expansion of Samedi Midi: L'Emission Haitienne to two hours from 11h-13h on Saturdays. For those interested in new approaches to spirituality, Religare has moved to a new, expanded time slot on Wednesday afternoons from 14h-15h. And welcome to Shapla Shaluk, a new Sunday afternoon Bengali magazine done in Bengali and English, which should prove a unique new addition to the weekend lineup..

Finally, many thanks to all those who donated to the most recent Funding Drive and a reminder to feel free to get involved at CKUT 90.3, community made radio.

Nous avons eu une année passionnante au département des émissions parlées. Après le succès de notre deuxième campagne de financement populaire, nos producteurs et productrices ont un nouveau mandat qui leur permettra de vous offrir la meilleure programmation 'alternative' qui soit.

Vous remarquerez quelques modifications notables à notre horaire: l' International Radio Report, une émission qui d'adresse aux amateurs d'ondes courtes, sera désormais diffusée le dimanche de 10h30 à 11h. Latin Time et America sont de retour avec une heure et demi de programmation latino américaine le dimanche de 9h à 10h30. Ces changements ont permis à Samedi Midi: L'émission Haitienne d'élargir son format; l'émission sera présentée dorénavant le samedi de 11h à 13h. , L'émission Religare a été conçue pour ceux et celles intéressés par de nouvelles approches de la spiritualité, elle est diffusée le mercredi de 14 à 15h. Et nous souhaitons la bienvenue à Shapla Shaluk, une nouvelle émission bengali diffusée dimanche après-midi en anglais et en bengali. Ce magazine radiophonique est certainement une nouveauté intéressante à notre programmation de fin de semaine.

Enfin, nous aimerions remercier tous ceux et celles qui ont fait des dons au cours de notre récente campagne de financement populaire. Nous vous invitons finalement à vous joindre à CKUT 90.3, radio universitaire communautaire de Montréal.

The National Campus and Community Radio Conference

CKUT 90.3 FM will be hosting the 11th annual conference of The National Campus and Community Radio Association (NCRA), July 8 - July 13, 1991. The conference provides a forum for community radio on a national level enabling participants not only to further broaden their broadcasting scope, but also empowering them to expand their role as a community service and a broadcasting force.

What is the NCRA?

The NCRA is an umbrella organization which represents the interests of community oriented broadcasters at the national level. The NCRA provides a mouthpiece for campus and community radio in Canada in its relations with governments, Canadian businesses, the record industry, and other special interest groups. The NCRA includes appproximately 40 campus and community radio stations from across Canada.

About the Conference...

Building on the success of past conferences, and the increasing importance of community-oriented radio in general, NCRC '91 will be broader than past conferences, incorporating a bilingual element and introducing a number of issue-oriented panels and workshops. This year's conference will include four focus areas:

- The Truth Behind Columbus - incorporating issues of concern to First Nations peoples and organizing a national week of programming focusing on Native issues.

- AIDS and the Media - how to address and cover HIV and AIDS-related issues in a balanced and non stereotypical way, and how to use the airwaves to disseminate safer sex and safer drug use information.

- Women and the Media - breaking down gender barriers in broadcasting, promoting the participation of women in programming, and how to cover issues of concern to women while avoiding traditional gender stereotyping.

- Youth and the Media - how to involve teenagers into a station's programming, covering issues of concern to youth and their problems including racism, unemployment, education, etc.

Other workshops and seminars will include sessions on the CRTC and its relations with campus/community radio, digital audio broadcasting, program syndication, programming by and for traditionally marginalised groups, networking with other community radio associations such as L'Association des Radiodiffuseurs Communautaires du Québec, The World Association of Community-Oriented Broadcasters and the American National Association of College Broadcasters, and much more...

For more information on the conference and on how to attend, contact Ian, Jo-anne or Becky at 398-6824 or 398-6787.

Le Congrès National des Radios Etudiantes et Communautaires

CKUT 90.3 MF sera la station hôte du 11e congrès annuel de L'Association Nationale des Radios Etudiantes et Communautaires (ANREC) du 8 juillet au 13 juillet 1991. Le congrès constitue un forum pour le milieu de la radio communautaire à l'échelle du pays, permettant aux participant(e)s d'élargir non seulement l'étendue de leur rôle dans la radiodiffusion mais aussi leur mission de service à la communauté.

En Quoi Consiste L'ANREC?

L'ANREC est un organisme dont le mandat consiste à représenter les intérêts des radiodiffuseurs communautaires à l'échelle nationale. L'ANREC fournit une voix aux stations de radio d'orientation communautaire du Canada dans leurs relations avec les divers organismes gouvernementaux, les entreprises canadiennes, l'industrie du disque, et autres groupes d'intérêt. L'organisme compte parmi ses membres quelques 40 stations étudiantes et communautaires à travers le Canada.

A propos du Congrès...

Grâce au succès des congrès antécédants et à l'importance grandissante que connaît la radio communautaire, le CNREC 1991 s'imposera davantage en incorporant un élément bilingue et en incluant bon nombre d'ateliers portant sur des thèmes spécifiques. Les thèmes majeurs seront:

- Christophe Colomb: La Vérité - l'intégration de questions touchant les peuples des premières nations et l'organisation d'une semaine nationale de programmation axée sur les questions autochtones

- Le Sida et les Média - Comment couvrir le Sida et le VIH d'une façon équilibrée et non-stéréotypée et comment utiliser les ondes pour transmettre de l'information sur les pratiques sexuelles et les pratiques de drogues plus sûres.

- Les Femmes et les Médias - l'élimination de la ségrégation sexuelle dans la radiodiffusion, la promotion des femmes dans la programmation, et, enfin, comment couvrir les sujets intéressant les femmes en évitant les stéréotypes féminins habituels.

- Les Jeunes et les Médias - comment inclure les adolescents dans la programmation d'une station, couverture de sujets intéressant les jeunes, leurs problèmes, y compris le racisme, le chômage, l'éducation, etc.

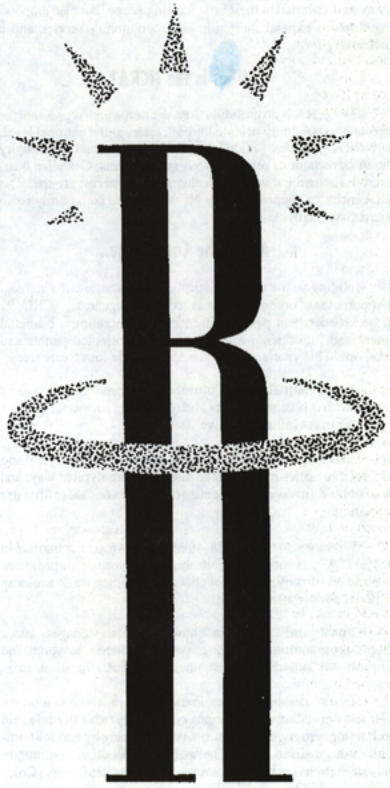
Les autres ateliers comprendront des sessions sur la CRTC et ses relations avec le milieu de la radio communautaire, la radio diffusée digitalement, la syndication des émissions, des stratégies pour attirer et servir différentes communautés et les liaisons avec les autres organismes de radio communautaire tels L'Association des Radiodiffuseurs Communautaires du Québec, L'Association Mondiale des Animateurs/trices de Radio Communautaire et L'Association des Radiodiffuseurs Collégiales des Etats Unis, et plus...

Pour plus de renseignements sur le congrès ou pour y participer, contactez Ian, Jo-Anne ou Becky au 398-6824 ou 398-6787.

ACTIVE CULTURALISM:

CULTURAL ACTIVISM

Over the course of five years working in community-oriented radio, and having been both interested and involved on a national level in Canada, for me, the fullest and most evocative description of the medium remains: A VOICE FOR THE VOICELESS.



by Ian Pringle

Statik jul.aug. 1991

The Voice for the Voiceless

The phrase strikes a chord comprised of the essential elements of the medium: a voice, in that it allows the individual (people and communities) to speak, to be known, and hence to explore and expound the realities of their existence. Voice: because voice is sound and its distinct potentials, its intimacy and immediacy. Perhaps most importantly, the phrase reveals the medium's access and advocacy applications — an opportunity for those without, those disenfranchised, those marginalised by dominant attitudes and media.

Community-oriented radio is young as a media force, evidenced by its recent prolific growth, its lack of specific regulation, the sparsity of literary attention paid to it, and a general misunderstanding of what it is. It rarely warrants specific or concentrated attention in surveys or studies of media in Canada, even those concerned with broadcast media, even radio.

As yet, it is not recognised by either of the Broadcast Act's two sectors of the Canadian broadcast system: public and private. Hence, as a legitimate third sector, it continues to be perceived and regulated on a foreign model. Since 1972, over 40 non-Native community-oriented radio stations have been licensed on Canadian AM/FM bands without a solid national framework of policy, intent or theory.

The vast commercialization of media, and its inherent commodification of both culture and information works in direct contrast to its prescribed role as a facility for mass communication and linkage. Rather than serve, it sells.

As a collective media force, community-oriented broadcasters reach over 2 million Canadians. Closed circuit, cable, AM, FM, there are well over 100 community-oriented stations in Canada. In many communities, both rural and urban, their listenership exceeds both that of the CBC and commercial broadcasters. The growth of Institutional FM broadcasting (by definition: stations affiliated with a post-secondary institution) was particularly significant in the 1980s. Since 1975, there have been over 25 stations licensed to broadcast on either AM or FM bands, with more currently seeking licenses. This does not include the plethora of community stations in Quebec, the few in other provinces, or the Native stations across the country.

The world over, community-oriented radio is a viable and unique medium of mass communication. In its composite definition are the essential elements of its theory: its nature as alternative, amateur, non-profit, representative, principled, volunteered for, and linked into a growing network of alternative organizations and associations. It is a distinct alternative to both the dominant mainstream culture, and to the dominant mainstream media which transmit and mold them.

An alternative is an 'other': a different approach than that or those presently offered. In the sense of community-oriented radio, it is the alternative to rigid formatting, highly packaged, highly regurgitated programming, the search for profit and slickness at the expense of content and social responsibility. It is 'the other': the blacks, the women, the gay men, the prisoners, the youth, the community centres, the Latin Americans, the lesbians, the children, etc.. It isn't just things about them, 'for' them — it is by them, of them.

Volunteer labour means amateur radio, radio subject to change, radio filled with the noise of transmission alongside its content: the stumbles, the silences, the occasional wrong speed, the moving microphones, popped 'p's, etc.. Volunteerism is a want-to motivation rather that a have-to motivation. It is the life-line of community-oriented radio: a reciprocal relationship of need. It is people who either love radio and have something to talk about, or people who love or need to talk about something and have radio access. Their commonality is that something drew them to the radio station and something keeps them coming back. They believe in it.

It is not the concept of electronic broadcasting which is askew in Western society, but rather the illegitimate use that is made of it. Crises such as the AIDS pandemic highlight the mass media's nature as a fundamental trust in the global dustbin of information, bias and media. The vast commercialization of media, and its inherent commodification of both culture and information works in direct contrast to its prescribed role as a facility for mass communication and linkage. Rather than serve, it sells. In commercialized media, the need to communicate responsibly the dangers, for example of unsafe sex and IV drug use, the ways in which HIV is transmitted and understood, is constantly undermined by the format needs of sensationalism, brevity, and moral respectability as defined by dominant sexist, heterosexist, and "other-fearing" attitudes and mores.

Non-profit amateur organisation and production, particularly in the realm of communication, must be understood as a political statement. It is, as McLuhan instructs, 'anti-environmental' and critical of the ground rules of society. It establishes a special relationship between media and the public. Community-oriented radio is contributing to a new definition of community which rejects idealized notions of unity and immediacy in favour of provoking and sustaining thought while recognizing and crediting different cultures and politics within a larger community of people.

Community-oriented radio needs to be managed as a national, yet decentralized form of media. It needs direction and a clear mandate both within the broadcast system as a whole and as a valuable component of Canadian society. Thus far it has been largely ignored by analysts and regulators alike. It is continually denied the credibility it is due. It has made valid, valuable and unique contributions to communities across Canada. As the CRTC is currently in consultation over a new policy concerning institutional broadcasting, and a policy for FM radio designed to carry us through the 1990s, it would be timely to fully recognize the contributions of the medium so as to plan its future.

Community-oriented radio needs to be managed as a national, yet decentralized form of media.

Media(ted) AIDS

by Jo-Anne Pickel

Geared toward the fifteen second sound bite and the twelve column-inch article, mainstream media tends to distort and gloss over complex, and often controversial, issues contributing little to people's understanding of the subject matter.

Nowhere has this distortion and misrepresentation been more apparent than with the coverage of issues related to HIV and AIDS.

In Canada and the United States, most media commentary turns a stubborn blind eye to the actual situation of people living with AIDS. The latter being portrayed as the "guilty victims" of the illness, those falling outside of the "general population" (the euphemism for what is thought of as "respectable society") and those often viewed - consciously or unconciously - as disposable by mainstream society. That thousands of people with AIDS have been pauperized by the illness due to the prohibitive cost of treatments, that potentially life-saving medication is consistently bound up by government red tape and the pharmaceutical industry's profit making machine, that people with AIDS often encounter the derision and contempt that society reserves only for its most unwanted, are all beyond the range of vision of the mainstream daily newspaper, magazine or news program.

And this is where campus and community radio can step in... CKUT 90.3 FM has consistently attempted to provide alternative coverage of issues related to HIV and AIDS. This coverage seeks to fill the gaps in mainstream media, and to address the issues it or finds too controversial to touch. With two AIDS Action Weeks and a regular rotation of safer sex, safer drug use and AIDS information announcements, CKUT (hopefully) has managed to convey information that is both explicit and culturally-sensitive, without falling into many of the stereotypes and biases prevalent in the mainstream discourse around AIDS. Other campus and community radio stations across the country have undertaken similar efforts to cover - and to combat - the AIDS crisis.

However, as the AIDS pandemic continues into its second decade of existence, much remains to be done and new strategies need to be formulated. For this reason, one of the main focuses of this year's National Campus and Community Radio Conference will be "AIDS and the Media"; these sessions will address the (lack of) coverage and the (mis)treatment of issues surrounding HIV and AIDS. Thanks to a cross-section of opinions and a relative freedom from commercial restraints, campus and community radio can work to provide a balance where one is needed, a voice for those who have none, and information that is both explicit and specific to communities not adequately served by agencies mandated for this purpose.

The task, it seems, will not be completed until we realize that "we are all people living with AIDS."

LA VERITE SUR CHRISTOPHE COLOMB

1992 – L'année où les gouvernements de l'Amérique du Nord dépenseront des sommes exorbitantes provenant des contribuables pour "célébrer" la "découverte de l'Amérique". Tandis que les postes de communication autochtones d'un bout à l'autre du Canada sont en voie d'extinction à cause de compressions budgétaires, nous verrons le spectacle édifiant d'une cérémonie nuptiale symbolique au milieu de l'océan où la Statue de la liberté, affublée d'une robe de mariée, sera unie à la statue de Christophe Colomb. Il va de soi que pendant ces cérémonies l'on fera peu de cas de "la Vérité sur Christophe Colomb" – les 500 ans de persécution, de destruction et de démoralisation des peuples des premières nations qui ont accompagné la colonisation de l'Amérique.

Un océan de sang, de déstruction et de violence — voilà ce que Colomb a directement ou indirectement apporté aux continents qui sont maintenant connus sous les noms d'Amérique de Nord et du Sud. Les générations subséquentes ont vu, dans certains cas, l'anéantissement complet et, dans d'autres cas, l'affaiblissement et la déshumanisation des autoctones des Amériques. L'histoire de ces continents est aussi l'histoire de la négation des droits des autoctones à l'autonomie et à l'auto-détermination. Mais notre système éducatif donne un portrait historique de l'établissement des Européens dons les Amériques qui est mal renseigné, déformé et basé sur l'idéologie dominante de ces même colonisations européens.

Nous voulons harnacher la puissance du réseau de stations de radio communautaires et étudiantes au Canada pour présenter cette vérité. Les plans vont de l'avant pour la mise sur pied d'une semaine de programmation en janvier 1992 où l'on mettra l'accent sur la vie, les luttes, et l'experience des peuples des premières nations du Canada. Nous établissons des contacts avec des stations autochtones des quatre coins du pays pour présenter notre idée dans le but d'obtenir leurs idées et suggestions sur la question. Nous avons également rejoint des personnes habitant l'Amérique centrale, l'Amérique du Sud et l'Afrique qui planifient des événements semblables. Une partie imporante du Congrès est consacrée non seulement au projet de "La Verité sur Christophe Colomb" mais aussi aux questions politiques, sociales et culturelles qui font face aux Premières Nations.

THE TRUTH BEHIND COLUMBUS

In 1492 Columbus sailed the ocean blue...

This catchy little phrase has become an iconic oral symbol of the origins of European North American society. It is taught in schools and homes all across this continent, ensuring that the arrival of Columbus in North America is fixed in people's minds, and imbued with an almost childlike innocence and historical pageantry. What follows the ditty is a generally blurred, misinformed and culturally askew historical portrait of the European settlement of the Americas.

In 1992, what must be said... Columbus sailed an ocean red.

An ocean of blood, and an ocean of destruction and violence is what Columbus — directly and indirectly — brought to both what were to become North and South America. Succeeding generations saw in some cases utter annihilation, in others dehabilitation and defilement, of the indigenous peoples of these continents. It is a history of denial of self-determination, self-government and self-existence.

1992 is the year governments across North America will be spending obnoxious amounts of tax dollars "celebrating" the "discovery of America". While native communications outlets across Canada are threatened with extinction because of funding cuts, we'll get to watch the Statue of Liberty, decked out in specially designed wedding garb, take part in a symbolic, over the ocean, wedding ceremony with a statue of Christopher Columbus.

No doubt among these festivities little will be said about "the truth behind Columbus" – the 500 years of persecution, destruction and demoralization of First Nations peoples that came with the colonization of the Americas.

Plans are in the works to create a week of programming in January 1992 to focus on the lives, struggles and experiences of First Nations peoples across Canada using the strength of the campus-based community radio network. We are in the process of contacting native stations from across Canada and other people in Central, South America and Africa who are planning similar counter-celebrations. A significant part of the NCRC '91 is devoted to not only "The Truth Behind Columbus" project but also to awareness of First Nations' issues and cultures.
